

Why Question the Author or Source of a Web Page?

It is important to ask these questions because often we are taught to believe that what we read in a magazine or book, or on the Web, is true. But this is not necessarily the case.

If you cannot find an author or an organization connected to a website be very, very suspicious. If no one wants to stand behind the creation of the page why should you believe what is written there?

Even if you can find an organization or author you still need to be cautious and make sure that the organization and/or author are who they say they are. This may include further research on a particular author or organization.

Return to The Art Institute of Vancouver Criteria for Evaluating Internet Resources